SAD JOURNEY
Mr. and Mrs. W. S. Read departed last evening for their former home in Tennessee in response to a telegram telling of the sudden death of their six year old daughter, at the home of her grandparents in that state, yesterday morning. It was about three weeks ago that the little lady with a younger brother, the two, the only children of Mr. and Mrs. Read, left accompanied by an uncle to visit with the grandparents in Tennessee. They arrived safely and the first news of the little one's illness was told in a telegram received yesterday morning. A second telegram received but a short while later told of her grave danger and but an hour or two after that a third telegram arrived telling of her death. Little Miss Read acquired many friends in Tempe by her unusually amiable character and it was with the deepest sympathy of the many acquaintances of the family at heart, that the parents commenced their sad journey last evening to the home state to care for the remains of their young daughter.

its increased expenses. Secretary R. E.

DROPPED WHITEWING
ON A RATTLESNAKE

It Was the First Time Mark Heinze
Ever Heard Such Music

Mark Heinze, who covers all of the 57 varieties for McNeil & Co., announced another brand to his already famous line, in the form of a rattlesnake, which caused Mark to review the greater part of his past life in the space of about thirty seconds.
Last Sunday while on a hunting trip in the company of Billie Volta, Mark stroled into the wilderness in the vicinity of his favorite hunting ground, with the firm conviction of breaking the already wearisome monotony of eating a cannon around with nothing more hanging to his belt than a jackrabbit.

Things were breaking pretty hard for Mark, when the unexpected happened—the proverbial white wing hove in sight. Eight things things started that will be handed down to many a future generation. The bird dropped but in coming to earth it first resting place was selected beneath the spreading branches of a greasewood. This of course could not be, as to leave that bird would cause a more lengthy discussion of how, what and wherefore—besides Mark was not inclined to talk; therefore, action was required in the form of—get the bird. In a vain endeavor to extract the bird from beneath the spreading boughs a rattle similar to that of the sound of a woodpecker was heard. That was nothing unusual to Mark—he came from a country of woodpeckers. Thirty seconds elapsed, Mr. Rattler was about to touch the bird, when suddenly there was a terrific tumult, the likeness of which was never heard before.
